

BUILDING THE AMERICAS

AN INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ORGANIZED BY THE CENTRE FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDIES AND GLOBALIZATION

INSTITUT D'ÉTUDES INTERNATIONALES DE MONTRÉAL

BUILDING THE AMERICAS

November 5th-7th, 2003

For its second International Conference, the Centre for International Studies and Globalization (Centre Études internationales et Mondialisation - CEIM) is hosting a forum of debates and discussions on the theme "Building the Americas". This Conference will focus on the institutional dimensions of the integration process in the Americas.

General Structure of the Conference

The first day will be devoted to a general debate on "Building of the Americas" and will be addressing the role of pan-American institutions. The next two days will be devoted to series of conferences/debates which will examine diverse institutional issues of the integration process.

Organization of the Conference: scientific committee and Canadian partnerships

The Conference is being held by the CEIM, in collaboration with the Institut d'Etudes Internationales de Montréal, the Canadian Chair for Research on Globalization, Citizenship and Democracy, the Canadian Chair for International Relations, the Canadian Chair for Research on Canadian Foreign Policy and Defense, Rights and Democracy, and the Centre d'études et de recherches sur le Brésil. This event is made possible by contributions, financial and others, of the Government of Canada (DFAIT), the Government of Québec (MRI) and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada.

BUILDING THE AMERICAS: THE CONFERENCE

« Building the Americas », an International Conference organized by the CEIM at the University of Quebec in Montreal (UQAM), will take place in the first week of November 2003. It will gather scholars and practitioners from all over the Americas to discuss institutional issues raised by the integration process of the Americas as it takes shape in the context of the FTAA negotiations. It will provide a forum of discussions and debates at a critical point of the FTAA agenda.

Integration in the Americas is primarily focused on economic considerations. However, its significance goes far beyond the elimination of trade barriers. On the economic front, new issues at the negotiating table have dramatic normative and institutional implications. Beyond the economics, the integration process involves security, democratic and social issues which are increasingly important in the process of integration.

Despite the lack of an articulated vision shared by the involved countries, the project of the Americas has taken two main directions: first, fostering an institutional environment suited to market-led development and economic integration; second, establishing - through minimalist inter-American cooperation - a normative framework meant to contribute to security, human development and respect of individual and democratic rights in the hemisphere. Aimed to draw societies closer together, the actual building process of the Americas is also the object intense debates and criticisms.

The objectives of this event are to explore the institutional issues involved in the « Building of the Americas » as they are emerging since the 2001 Quebec Summit and to discuss other possible scenarios.

The conference poses two main questions: (1) What are the institutions needed for the building of the Americas?, and (2) Can the Americas be more than a simple mosaic of States regrouped in a Community of democracies united only by the market forces?

ROCH DENIS, Rector, University of Quebec in Montreal

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6TH CONFERENCES AND DEBATES

8:30am-10:15am: Economic integration and regional asymmetries

The pan-American regional economic space is characterized by three main features: a significant polarization in favor of the United States, a profound asymmetry between countries in terms of their size and technological development, and a great number of trade and cooperation agreements. How ought these hemispheric realities be addressed and reconciled with the agenda of economic negotiation?

PHILIPPE FAUCHER, University of Montreal (Chair)

CARLOS ALBA, El Colegio de México. Mexico
MATHIEU ARÈS, Observatoire des Amériques, UQAM, Canada
MAUREEN IRISH, University of Windsor, Canada
CARLOS QUENAN, Institut des Amériques, France
VIVIANNE VENTURA, Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, ECLAC

10:30am-12:30pm: What type of regulation is needed for Americas?

A regional economic space is emerging. How should economic regulation and governance, market surveillance and corrective measures in the Americas be addressed? Is there an approach to resolve these issues emerging?

MICHÈLE RIOUX, Centre for International Studies and Globalization, UQAM (chair)

SOPHIE DUFOUR, Desjardins, Ducharme, Stein, Monast.
NICOLA PHILLIPS, University of Manchester, United Kingdom
JORGE SCHIAVON, Centro de Investigación y Dociencias Económica, Mexico

SYLVIA OSTRY, Centre for International Studies, University of Toronto, Canada

2:30pm-4:15pm: Order or Human Security for the Americas?

Since the events of September 11th, security has become an increasingly important aspect of American hemispheric integration. What are the stakes (terrorism, drugs, immigration, etc.)? Can one speak of a regional order of security, and if so, what form will it take?

STÉPHANE ROUSSEL, Canadian Chair for Research on Canadian Foreign Policy and Defense, UQAM (chair)

RAÚL BERNAL-MEZA, University of Buenos Aires, Argentina
PATRICE FRANKO, Colby College, United States
DAVID HAGLUND, Queen's University, Canada
HAROLD KLEPAK, Royal Military College of Canada, Canada
ALBERT LEGAULT, Canadian Chair for Research on International Relations, Canada
DELPHINE NAKACHE, McGill University, Canada

4:30pm-6:30pm : Security and Human Rights (Debate)

Terrorism and other threats to States' security, as well as the very measures those States take in order to protect their institutions and their populations, carry an important risk of violation of human rights and civil liberties. Hence, it becomes essential that the inter-American notion of security includes measures for upholding human rights. In the wake of the OAS Special Conference on Security, how is it possible to reconcile respect for human rights with the States' legitimate concerns for their security?

ANNE LEAHY, Director, Institut d'Études Internationales de Montréal, Canada (chair)

SYLVIA AGUILERA, Director of the Mexican Commission of Defense and Promotion of Human Rights, Mexique SANTIAGO CANTON, Secretary General, Inter-American Commission on Human Rights

SARAH FOUNTAIN SMITH, Deputy Director, Regional Security, Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade, Canada DANIEL WILKINSON, Human Rights Watch, United States

Human rights and investors' rights: an unbridgeable divide?

PIERRE-PAUL PROULX, University of Montreal, Canada (chair)

DIANA BRONSON, Rights and Democracy, Canada LAURENT CARDINAL, Ministère du développement économique et régional, Québec TERESA GUTIÉRREZ-HACES, National Autonomous University of Mexico, Mexico

10:30am-12:15pm: Democratic values for people or for market liberalization?

Do the Americas constitute a « Community of democracies » serving the public interest or does pan-American hemispheric integration pose a threat to established economic and social rights as well as to the process of democratization?

VICTOR ARMONY, UQAM, Canada (chair)

MAXWELL CAMERON, University of British Columbia, Canada ISIDORO CHERESKY, University of Buenos Aires, Argentina MARIE-JOSÉE MASSICOTTE, University of Ottawa, Canada PHILIP OXHORN, McGill University, Canada

12:30pm-2:30pm: Lunch Session

MICHELLE ROULEAU, Association québécoise des Femmes autochtones, Canada

2:30pm-4:15pm: The Americas/Las Américas: cultural diversity and hemispheric identity?

Is it possible, or even desirable, to construct a pan-American identity? If so, is it more apt to grow from existing supranational constructs such as las Américas (from Bolívar to Martí) or the at times ambiguous term "American," or could it result from a distinctive common denominator? Is a culturally-based continental identity even desirable, given the diversity of the continent, or should it be based upon an emancipatory horizon such as the New World, the American dream, or the nuevo hombre americano?

PIERRE OSTIGUY, UQAM, Canada (chair)

IVAN BERNIER, Laval University, Canada
AMARYLL CHANADY, University of Montreal, Canada
CLAUDE DENIS, University of Ottawa, Canada
JORGE LARRAÍN, University Alberto Hurtado, Chile
LICIA SOARES DE SOUZA, Center for brazilian studies, UQAM, Canada

4:30pm-6:30pm : Institutions for the Americas or for the States of the Americas, for public or private interests? (Debate)

Hemispheric negotiations rest on three pillars: summit conferences, interministerial meetings, and regional organizations. What is the respective role of each of these three pillars? What type of regional governance is foreseeable?

DORVAL BRUNELLE, Centre for International Studies and Globalization, UQAM (chair)

LOUIS BÉLANGER, Laval University, Canada
JEAN-PIERRE CHARBONNEAU, Deputy, Borduas, Canada
STEPHEN CLARKSON, University of Toronto, Canada
FRANÇOIS CRÉPEAU, University of Montreal, Canada
